

Diploma Policy of Okayama University

[April 19, 2010 Decided by the President]

The Diploma Policy of Okayama University sets the following goals for its students to attain by the time they graduate so that they can develop the intellect and knowledge they acquire, and pass them on to future generations.

Education combined with a sense of humanity

Our students will take an interest in diverse issues surrounding nature and society, as well as acquire powers of logical thinking, judgment, and creativity, which will enable them to resolve issues responsibly. Moreover, we want them to learn from their forefathers and be guided by a true sense of humanity and morality.

Specialization with a purpose

Our students will not only acquire professional expertise and technical skills in response to contemporary needs, but also be aware of their relationship with nature and society, so as to make their utmost contribution to society.

Effective information processing

Our students will not only acquire the ability to collect, analyze, and correctly use information on their own whenever necessary, but will also be capable of disseminating the information effectively.

Ability to meet the challenges in contemporary society

Our students will acquire international awareness and language skills needed for globalization, as well as communication skills required for life in society. Students will also be capable of acting responsibly in all forums, from international to local settings, while developing harmonious relationships with others.

Lifelong pursuit of self-realization

Through their regular course of study as well as extra-curricular activities such as sports, the arts and culture, students will be able to pursue lifelong self-development. In this way, students will take the initiative to act autonomously while in pursuit of happiness in their lives.
